Global Health Law is at a crossroads. In the aftermath of the devastating COVID-19 pandemic, new norms of international law are being negotiated, and old ones revisited. Other global health challenges loom large. The rise of non-communicable diseases, shortages in medicines and medical personnel, and the effects of climate change - all affect global health. At the core of all these challenges stands normative discussions around equity.

The presentation will offer an overview of existing global health law, as well as its new horizons in the face of contemporary challenges.
